PROF. AKINOLA ABAYOMI

Lagos State Commissioner for Health

Welcome all participants to the event, he posited that government, as a policy maker, needs to define policies that lead to cutting-edge regulation and quality control practices that do not threaten citizens' security and that of the state. He also urged government to create the enabling environment for the private sector to flourish, while harping on the urgency of capacity transfer, not only in the manufacturing sector but in the research and development (R&D) segment. Speaking on efforts being put in place for local vaccine manufacturing to begin in Nigeria, he observed that the role of government remains pivotal, adding that vaccine manufacturing requires the right economic environment and biotechnological stimulation. He described the pharma expo, which advocated the indigenisation of local manufacturing, as being replete with growth and expansion opportunities for the Nigerian pharmaceutical landscape. The health commissioner highlighted the indigenisation agenda of the Lagos State government through activities going on in the herbal / complementary / alternative medicine industry in the state, under the purview of the Lagos State Traditional Medicine Board (LSTMB), as one of the efforts capable of stimulating the growth of the local manufacturing industry for the ultimate goal of attaining medicine security.

DR OBI ADIGWE

DG - The National Institute for Pharmaceutical Research and Development (NIPRD)

Warned that more dangers await the Nigerian health space, if stakeholders fail to build capacity in the local drug manufacturing industry. He disclosed that PMG-MAN has always played very significant roles in the Nigerian health sector, recalling that the body had warned of impending health crises prior to the emergence of the corona virus pandemic. He commended NIPRD for securing funds towards boosting local manufacturing in the country. He also alluded to the big thing coming. MIPRD and Bloom are partnering in a World Bank-funded project to provide the biggest intervention in the sector. I urge the industry to embrace this. The size of the pharma sector is so big to continue to play at the level Nigeria is playing. The AFCTA makes it even more urgent.

PROF. MOJISOLA ADEYEYE
DG, NAFDAC

Harping on the achievements of her office in the area of strengthening the local pharmaceutical industry, She called for more government involvement in health-related projects and innovations. She asked the Nigerian government to take a cue from India whose Ministry of Trade and Industry recently met with pharmaceutical manufacturers in the Asian country. Highlighting one of the highpoints of her administration, She said: "Our 5+5 policy aims at boosting the local manufacturing industry. The policy has yielded fruits as we now have 34 registered products from the nine we had prior to this time. NAFDAC will not allow the local manufacturing industry to die. Having attained Maturity Level 3, we are aiming towards Level 4." On NAFDAC's service oriented philosophy, she said: "We are placing more premium on the health of Nigerians and not on profit. Local vaccine manufacturing will happen faster than we think. We are preparing for it. Some NAFDAC staff are right now on their way to South Korea for bio-manufacturing training. We now have more international partners collaborating with our local manufacturing industry."

Corroborating on the need for governments to get involved in efforts aimed at strengthening the health outcomes in African countries, especially Nigeria with its exploding population

PROFESSOR CYRIL USIFOH
President - Pharmaceutical Society of Nigeria

Government needs to do more by tackling the forex and import duty crises that have made it extremely difficult for local manufacturers to do business in Nigeria. With no forex to import APIs and the high cost of import duties on pharmaceutical raw materials, government needs to change policy to help local manufacturers fulfil the promise of medicine security to the citizens. We need this help urgently to be able to compete globally.

DR. FIDELIS AYEBAE
MD, Fidson Pharmaceuticals PLC

Regulatory bodies like NAFDAC have been playing so far in stimulating the local manufacturing sector for optimal performance, urged all policy makers to work more towards protecting the Nigerian pharmaceutical industry with stiff regulation and policies that would advance, rather than stifle, it. He added that unless Nigerian policy makers protect the local manufacturing industry, the African Continental Free Trade Area, when fully operational, would only open Nigeria up for all sorts of imports that would eventually degrade the potentials of local manufacturers.

PROFESSOR AHMED TIJANI
Chairman, The Pharmacy Council of Nigeria (PCN)

Bemoaning the precarious situation in the disposable syringes manufacturing segment in Nigeria called on PMG-MAN and other stakeholders to do something about the disturbing situation.

DR. WALTER KAZADI MULOMBO
WHO Country Representative

Medicine security remains the real essence of the global health security agenda. He commended the Nigerian government for some of the proactive steps it is taking in ensuring medicine security for its citizens. According to Mulombo, "Working with the Nigerian Health Minister and NAFDAC in putting in place those requirements that would lead the country to attaining universal health coverage shows that Nigeria is truly and practically on course." On how and when Nigeria would start its local vaccine manufacturing, he added: "We need to accelerate the pace of our local manufacturing. There must be a paradigm shift. Nigeria has the potential to change the narrative in Africa, thanks to its innovativeness and capacity to boost local manufacturing."

This expo will be a good boost to the pharmaceutical sector in Nigeria. The keynote speaker made a clear point which I align with. The pharmaceutical sector in Nigeria needs to embrace the path of WHO PQ. This is the only pathway to move the country to the next level.
